Priya's Corner: A week without screens

Posted by Priya (12) on 14 March

- [1] Last month our English teacher, Mr Fenwick, had a surprising idea. He asked our whole class to try a "screen-free week": seven days without phones, tablets, computers or TV in our free time. We could still use the computers at school for our homework, but not at home. Most of us laughed. I was sure I couldn't do it, because I usually spend about three hours a day on my phone.
- [2] The first two days were really hard. After school I didn't know what to do. I kept looking for my phone, but my mum had put it in a drawer in the kitchen. On Tuesday evening I was so bored that I tidied my room – and that has never happened before!
- [3] On Wednesday things got better. My little brother and I found an old board game in the cupboard and played it for two hours. On Thursday I went to the park with my friend Jade and we tried skateboarding. Jade is much better at it than me, but I only fell off three times. I also started reading a detective story, and I finished it on Saturday night.
- [4] Now the week is over and I have got my phone back. Am I going to throw it away? No, of course not! But I have decided to keep it out of my bedroom at night, and I sleep much better now. Next month our class wants to try a "no-sugar week". I'm not sure that's a good idea ...

Beispiellösung:

Hi Priya, great post! I would like to try a screen-free week, but I think it would be hard for me. I often chat with my friends online. In my free time I usually play basketball and listen to music. I also help my dad in the garden. Without screens, you could go cycling with friends or bake a cake together – that's fun and you can eat it later! What are you going to do in the no-sugar week? Can you really live without chocolate? Bye, Lukas
